A. All the oxygen in the air might have been used up centuries ago if it weren't for green plants. Through a process called "photosynthesis," the green leaves of plants use the energy of sunlight to convert carbon dioxide and water into food the plants need to live. Carbon dioxide is one of the gases in our atmosphere. Carbon dioxide is composed partly of oxygen, too. During plants' food-making process, some of the oxygen is left over, and is released into the atmosphere. Because of green plants, the amount of oxygen in the air has always remained about the same.

You can win a World Almanac if your question is selected. Send your name and age to JOHNNY WONDER, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 1258, Santa Cruz, CA 95061
